To whom it may concern,

As a small group practice physician and owner, the process of building an office was not something I was totally comfortable with. I had some definite ideas about what I felt would lead to a functional office building, but the details beyond that were definitely not my area of expertise.

In 2007, I engaged Robert Lopez of Lopez-Salas architects for the purpose of design of a medical office building in New Braunfels, TX. Mr. Lopez and his firm did an awesome job from the initial planning phases through completion of the building. The attention to detail was impressive and definitely fit with the approach that many of us have who practice medicine-details matter. I felt very comfortable with the straight-forward approach that I experienced.

I am proud of the finished product. Our building is definitely not an "average" building. I have no problems giving an excellent recommendation for Lopez -Salas architects.

Sincerely,

David Starch MD
