

BUILDER/CONTRACTOR OF THE YEAR

PRO-SPORT CONSTRUCTION

Some tennis court construction companies started out as general contractors or drifted in from other trades. But Pro-Sport Construction Inc. of Devon, Pa., has always been there.

That's because, when other 15-year-old kids were cutting grass or bagging groceries, Mark Brogan was learning to build tennis courts. He worked for a specialty sports contractor, then for a family tennis court business. Along the way, he picked up knowledge about how he wanted to do business.

As a Super-B champion squash player and a golfer, he was already aware of the importance of good sports facilities. It wasn't any surprise when he founded Pro-Sport Construction in 1995 that the company built not only all types of tennis court surfaces, but sport courts, air structures, putting greens and more. "We tell people to diversify and expand their businesses so that they'll survive during the tough times," he says.

Now, the team at Pro-Sport has a combined 75 years of sports-specific experience, and Brogan himself still personally oversees every project. He also serves as the Tennis President of the American Builders Association and a trustee member of the program, and has fied Tennis Court Builder (CTCB). His company is RSI's 2010 Builder of the Year.

"When you talk to someone about Mark Brogan, you'll get Stringfellow, executive vice president. "His sense of humor is as much Pro-Sport's excellent construction pressed to find someone like Mark who doesn't genuin

TIPS FOR SUCCESS

- Specialize, but don't limit yourself. Pro-Sport's primary focus is tennis, but the company has also branched into other sports facilities.
