Project: Upgrade an Electrical Panel or Wiring

Comments: Maybe it was just a matter of the age of the young man who performed the initial visit/quote build but Luke was polite, unassuming, and fair. I received 4 other bids for the same work. In couple of bids, substantially less work would be done and the bids were thousands more (2.5 times more in one bid). We all understand why this happens but, when tradesman looks you in the face and says, "you have plenty of equity" or, "you're just flipping this house" it is unacceptable. I had no such experience with Luke and with Andersen Electric. It would seem they are not out to see what they can get. It would also seem that with some companies you are expected to pay $75 to 150/hr for an apprentice electrician to train alongside a journeyman who you might be expected to pay $200 to 250/hr for! Do your research! Get 5 or 10 bids if you have to. Call a company like Andersen. When enough customers begin rejecting these greedy, astronomical bids, contractors will hopefully see the error in their ways.
